Mission and audience

Help child champions support young youth outside pre-K and K–12 school settings. Serve homeschoolers, mothers, fathers, grandparents, aunts, uncles, youth pastors, and other adults in private, home, community, or faith settings. Include both secular and faith-based audiences.

Your three responsibilities

Outstanding Opportunity

Recruit adults, trainers, facilitators, partners, and other contributors who want to help young youth outside the school setting. Build relationships with families and community groups and develop a team that can reach these audiences and deliver useful support.

Financially Fiscal (invest in yourself)

Promote and sell child champion products, services, and merchandise for home, private, and community use. Offer available training, consulting, partnerships, and related resources. Use the same or similar teaching material as ETL and C4K, adapting examples and delivery to the adults and young people involved.

Charitable Contributions

Coordinate approved giveaways, free learning resources, and other charitable help for families and community audiences. Work through the appropriate nonprofit for donations and other support received, and follow through on the resources and assistance given.

How you lead the work

- Learn what parents, relatives, homeschoolers, youth pastors, and other community adults need to support young people.
- Adapt delivery to home and community settings, including the time and resources available to the adults involved.
- Develop the recruiting, sales, training, consulting, and support team around the available offerings.
- Coordinate shared material with ETL, C4K, and the Child Champions Hub while maintaining OST’s distinct audience focus.

Results you report
